Changing the way you think about etiquette

+ About Scarlet Communications

Scarlet Communications

provides modern, relevant etiquette training. We annually enlist and engage the community, parents, teachers, youth, professionals and athletes to ensure that our training is timely, relevant, engaging and empowering. Following are the results of the Scarlet Communications 2014 Lunch and Learn.

+ 2015 Lunch & Learn Results

Engage.

On January 20, 2014, we engaged a collection of parents, entrepreneurs, professionals and community leaders to collect insights on a broad range of everyday social and professional challenges and development opportunities.

Enlighten.

The session facilitated by Scarlet's founder, Jacqueline M. Baker, was an interactive, idea sharing session. It allowed participants to gather personal insights about other participants, in addition to sharing their experiences, knowledge and perspectives on every day scenarios & situations.

Empower.

The sharing of information & perspectives provided participants with an opportunity to question that way they think about etiquette & how their interactions can negatively or positively affect their intended outcomes. Most importantly, this Lunch and Learn provides Scarlet Communications with the opportunity to infuse real-world, modern & relevant etiquette lessons & interactivity into each training session that we teach.

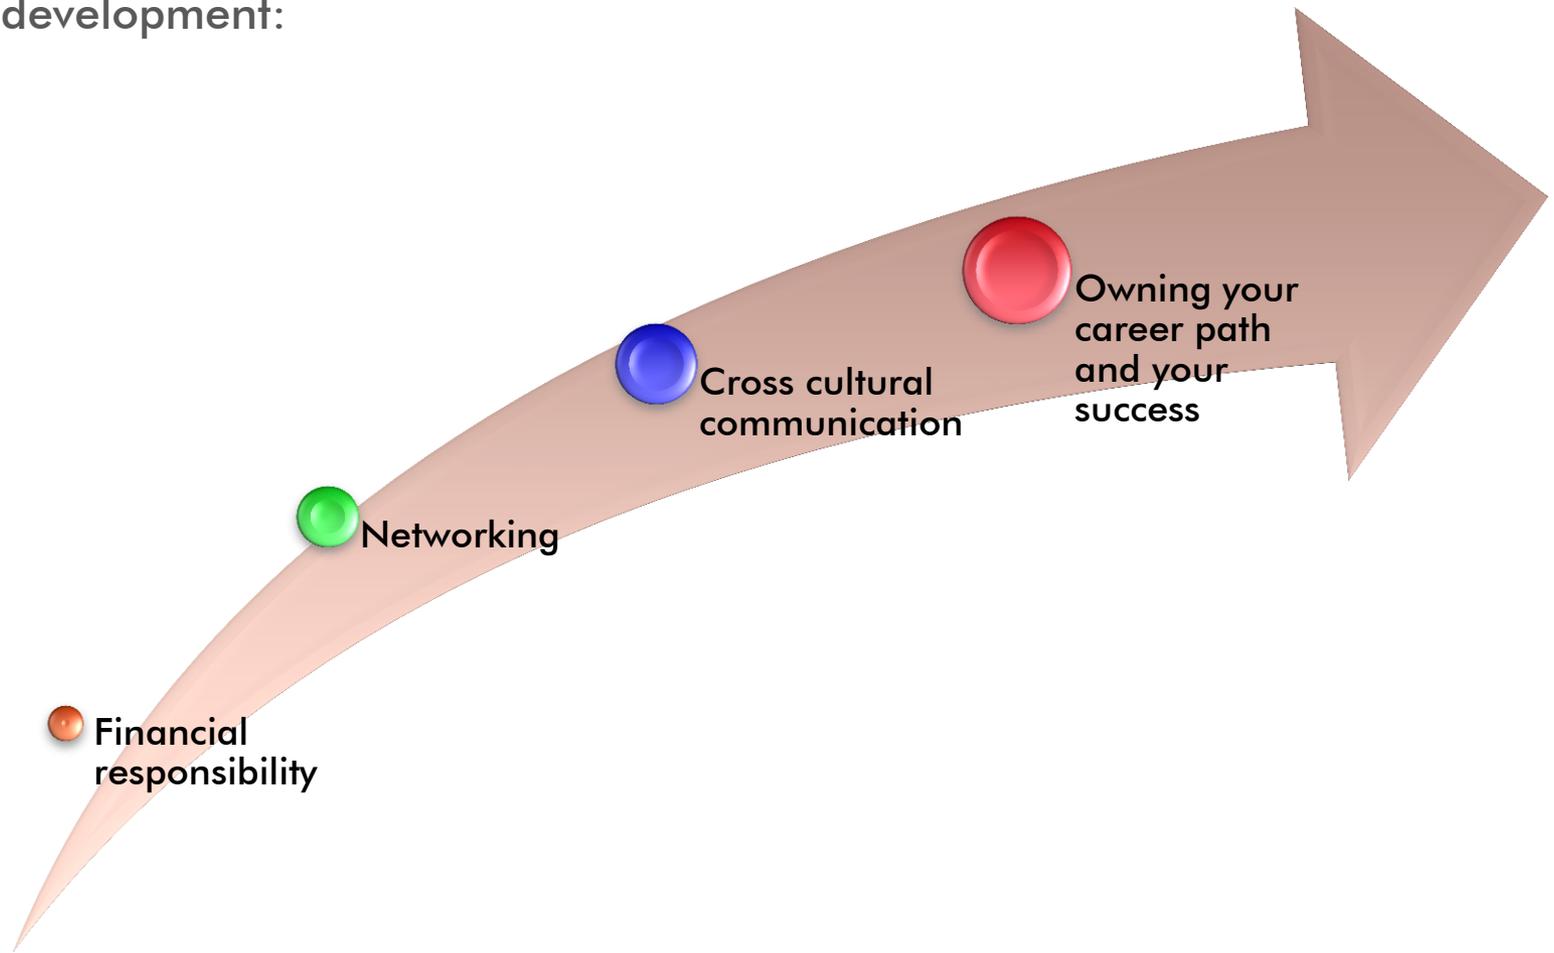

+ Challenges

Youth and young adults face a unique set of challenges as their minds are working to explore, learn, grown and decide what to focus on. The challenges that youth face can be vast and they change often, but the top challenges identified are:

+ Things Youth Should Learned Earlier

While youth development can be acquired from several different sources and at different times, the earlier the exposure the quicker the skills can begin to be utilized. Parent, teachers, youth and community leaders shared that they wish they would have learned the following skills earlier in their development:

+ Most Essential Etiquette Topics for Youth

There is associated etiquette and protocol in every facet of our personal and professional lives. Participants in the 2014 Lunch and Learn identified that the following are the most essential topics youth should master for the benefit of their growth and development:

What's Next?

We recognize that youth and young adults face a unique set of challenges in pursuit of turning their dreams, ideas and visions into reality all while learning critical development skills.

While there are a significant number of training resources that are available to youth including their formal schooling, Scarlet Communications addresses the additional critical life skills in modern, relevant and engaging ways.

In 2015, we will continue to address these challenges in a series of interactive training sessions online and in-person.

We look forward to having you and your future leader join us in an upcoming session, addressing the top challenges identified, along with many others.
